Originally developed in Australia, the Mates in Construction programme is based on the idea that suicide is everyone’s responsibility and it is not something that should be left to mental health professionals alone. The programme offers workers three levels of training to help workmates, and additional support for companies such as case management and critical incident support. We have little information regarding this, and know that some of the companies has adopted this programme, worthwhile looking at. Case study https://www.sitesafe.org.nz/guides--resources/case-studies/netcon/• Maartin (Electrix) - Waratah (or “Death Stick”): If stakes are used for marking out proposed works, be careful not to drive them straight through any underground services. Know before you dig what services are located before you start digging. Make sure you receive the service plans or phone Vector for cable locations.• ACC have resources to help you prevent injuries on a construction site. The Construction Health and Safety Risk Cards is an online resource with information to help you identify common risks and keep construction workers safe. WorkSafe also has resources to help construction workers. ACC has made available the following: https://www.riskcards.acc.co.nz/#/start• Hazardous Substances Calculator: https://www.hazardoussubstances.govt.nz/calculator will help you to create an Inventory and work out what key requirements you need to meet, based on the hazardous substances you use, handle, manufacture and store at your workplace.
